

How to internationally deal with the intangible values of our national university education?

Bernd Mahr

Technische Universität Berlin

Conclusion

- International academic cooperation is a challenge to our national university education.
- Many of its procedures are not codified and many of its values are intangible.
- Its processes can not easily be transferred or exported to give the same results elsewhere.
- We are confronted with the question of what system of higher education follows after the European system in the 19th and the United States system in the 20th century.
- In our internal discussions, I believe, it is necessary to take a global view.

Pakistan

The Commission

Lahore

German Experience (DAAD)

Stand Mai 2007

Conclusion

- International academic cooperation is a challenge to our national university education.
- Many of its procedures are not codified and many of its values are intangible.
- Its processes can not easily be transferred or exported to give the same results elsewhere.
- We are confronted with the question of what system of higher education follows after the European system in the 19th and the United States system in the 20th century.
- In our internal discussions, I believe, it is necessary to take a global view.

The Challenge

